Theme of the Seminar

In today's rapid trend of evolving business environment, accounting and finance face a multifold challenges and opportunities. These include the increasing reliance on technology, such as artificial intelligence and blockchain, which are transforming traditional accounting practices and financial systems. Issues like data privacy, cybersecurity, and regulatory compliance have become more critical, as businesses deal with an ever-growing volume of financial information. Additionally, sustainability reporting and the integration of environmental, social, and governance (ESG) factors are now central issues in financial decision-making. The global nature of modern markets also bring concerns regarding international financial regulations and the impact of geopolitical events. As businesses adapt to these contemporary issues, accounting and finance professionals must remain agile, ensuring accuracy, transparency, and maintain ethical practices in a complex financial landscape. This seminar aimed at expanding new horizon to cope up with the recent changes in financial education in contrast with identification of future opportunities to ensure sustainable development in the field of financial and economic research followed by the successful implementation both in industry and academia.
